PARK ROYAL

Calling all kids! Help Park Royal build a LEGO garden

WEST VANCOUVER, B.C. – A unique experience is taking place at Park Royal every Saturday this May. Teaming up with LEGO certified professional, Robin Sather, Park Royal is building a LEGO garden – one tiny LEGO brick at a time.

“This event is quite distinctive as we have never done anything quite like it before,” said Nancy Small, Director of Marketing & Sustainability at Park Royal. “We encourage kids to actively take part in this and help us build a huge garden made out of LEGO bricks, which will be on display in Park Royal until the end of May.”

Kids have their own designated LEGO building and playing area, but everyone can also watch the LEGO master in action as he creates his next masterpiece. Robin Sather will be constructing giant flowers and insects made out of LEGO, which are the main centerpieces for the garden. But our master LEGO builder extraordinaire can't do it all on his own, which is why LEGO art from the kids' area will also be added to the LEGO garden.

The first LEGO garden building session took place this past weekend and had a fabulous turnout as countless kids let their creative sides show.

Kids and parents are encouraged to come down to Park Royal to be part of this fun event and help our LEGO garden bloom. The Park Royal LEGO garden building experience is happening in centre court in Park Royal North on Saturday, May 11 and in Park Royal South on Saturday, May 18 and 25 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. All LEGO art will be on display until the end of May.
